Stores get CBD products deadline

Shops receive 60 days to pull or sell goods

Gov. Eric Holcomb is directing state excise police to resume checking stores for cannabidiol, or CBD, products after Attorney General Curtis Hill issued an opinion declaring them illegal in Indiana.

Stores will have 60 days to either sell or pull products from their shelves.

In a statement, Holcomb said excise police will "perform normal, periodic regulatory spot checks of CBD oil products."

Those checks will focus on CBD products that contain any THC, the psychoactive ingredient in marijuana. That includes products with less than .3 percent THC, which can't produce a "high."

"Because CBD oil has been sold in Indiana for several years," Holcomb said, "the excise police will use the next 60 days to educate, inform and issue warnings to retailers so there is a reasonable period of time for them to remove products that contain THC."

He said that timeline will provide state lawmakers an opportunity to review existing CBD oil laws, including labeling requirements, before product confiscations begin.

Nathan Renschler, the owner of two stores that sell CBD near Evansville and wholesaler kyhempgoods.com based in Kentucky, said the only CBD product that doesn't have THC is CBD isolate. The product looks like a salt and contains none of the other cannabinoids present in the marijuana plant.

AIDS memorial gets makeover

The Indiana AIDS Memorial is getting a major renovation just in time for World AIDS Day, when it will be rededicated.

World AIDS Day is Dec. 1. The rededication ceremony starts at 9 a.m. at the memorial, which is nestled among trees at the base of a hill in Crown Hill Cemetery.

When it was erected in 2000, the monument was one of only four in the U.S. dedicated to those who died of HIV/AIDS. It went up at a cost of about $100,000 shortly after San Francisco's, Los Angeles' and Key West's AIDS monuments and ahead of New York's.

This week the monument got a $75,000 overhaul, which included the addition of a low semi-circular wall and large circular base of stamped concrete around the monument's centerpiece sculpture as well as a sidewalk leading to it from the cemetery road, improvements that should make the memorial more inviting.

Indiana's senators see tax bill differently

Young backs plan, but Donnelly sees flaws

WASHINGTON – Democratic Sen. Joe Donnelly doesn't see how Hoosiers would be better off under a proposed overhaul of the federal tax code.

Republican Sen. Todd Young says the bill the Senate could begin voting on Wednesday would lead to a simpler, fairer tax code.

While both senators are reserving final judgment on the still-evolving tax plan, the directions they're leaning are clear. Donnelly, who has been alternately wooed and pressured for months by President Donald Trump's administration, said Tuesday the bill doesn't include the components he told the president were needed to win his support.

"I think there's a tremendous well of support for a tax bill that helps keep jobs in America, focuses actually on the middle class and doesn't explode the debt," Donnelly said. "That's not what this is."

Young, despite past concerns about the size of the federal debt, is strongly leaning toward supporting the bill.

"My objective here is to try to come up with tax legislation that is fair, that is simpler, that allows Hoosiers to keep more of what they earn," Young said. "At least in its current form, I think this legislation does that, and I hope it passes."
